

Hyde Park Resident Named Shareholder at Boston Law Firm

BOSTON, Jan. 9, 2008— Joseph Teja, Jr. of Hyde Park was named a shareholder at Wolf, Greenfield & Sacks, P.C., the largest law firm in New England devoted exclusively to intellectual property law.

Formerly counsel with the firm, Teja has advised clients with complex IP portfolios including hundreds of patent applications. A member of the firm's ECT Group, his expertise includes patents for optoelectronic devices and optical communications, analog and digital circuits, electronic devices, semiconductor design and fabrication, and telecommunications.

Before receiving his law degree from Suffolk University Law School, Teja had more than 10 years' experience as a researcher and engineer in electronics and optics.

After graduating from Rutgers University with degrees in electrical engineering and Italian literature, Teja received his master's degree in electrical engineering and computer science from MIT. He's been named a Massachusetts "Rising Star" in IP law.

Wolf Greenfield serves companies that make everything from pharmaceuticals to software to electronics to snowboards, as well as representing academic research centers. The firm counsels clients in the areas of patents, trademarks, copyrights, designs, trade secrets, and related licensing and litigation. In 2006, the firm filed 2266 patent applications and 883 trademark applications in over 130 countries. Web: www.wolfgreenfield.com
